VLSystems CEO Accepted as Member of Adaptive Business Leaders Organization

IRVINE, CA—May 5, 2008—VLSystems, Inc. announced today that Thomas White, chief executive officer for VLSystems, has been accepted as a member to the Adaptive Business Leaders Organization (ABL). ABL is an exclusive membership organization that provides continuing education and development to technology and healthcare chief executives through forums such as round tables and conferences. The majority of ABL’s members are nominated by existing members as someone who is of high caliber, ethical and a good thinker.

White has served as the chief executive officer at VLSystems since 1993. Prior to VLSystems, White served as a CPA with Peat Marwick and Coopers and Lybrand, during which time he also simultaneously served as a controller and CFO for a few other medium-sized organizations.

“Mr. White’s membership into this exclusive organization is a natural fit for both ABL and VLSystems,” says Lee Green, vice president of marketing for VLSystems. “Our deep understanding of business issues and healthcare regulations, coupled with our strong expertise in networking, information management and security, make VLSystems the ideal partner to provide secure information solutions to the healthcare industry.”

The overall objective of ABL is to provide a powerful service to executives who want to be sure that they, and their companies, are well positioned for success. Members serve as confidential advisors to one another, sharing concerns, feedback and solutions. Benefits of membership also include remaining at the forefront of emerging trends and gaining knowledge about potential opportunities as well as downfalls.
